

You sell your product to a customer.

The factor (in this example, CIT) works directly with your customer and ensures they are credit-worthy for you to do business with. CIT collects payments from the customer.

Your company sells its receivables to CIT, and we pay you what you are owed within a reasonable timeframe so you can continue making goods and paying your employees.

This process brings steady cash flow to your company.